Regional Conference
Public Service Delivery in Arab Countries: Corruption Risks and Possible Responses
Gamart, Tunisian Republic
29-30 September 2011

Programme

Supported by the UNDP Regional Project on “Anti-Corruption and Integrity in the Arab Countries” (ACIAC)
OVERVIEW

1. The conference on “Public Service Delivery in Arab Countries: Corruption Risks and Possible Responses” convenes at the coastal city of Gamart in the Tunisian Republic on 29-30 September 2011, with the joint support of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) and the Arab Anti-Corruption and Integrity Network (ACINET), in cooperation with the National Fact-Finding Committee on Corruption and Malversation (CCM) in the Tunisian Republic. It is organized in the framework of the UNDP regional project on “Anti-Corruption and Integrity in the Arab Countries” (ACIAC) and in support of the implementation of the ACINET Programme of Work for 2010-2011.

2. The conference gains particular importance in light of ongoing regional events, which have placed anti-corruption at the heart of public demand, and highlighted the negative impact of corruption on the daily lives of people in the Arab region. In response to these emerging developments and building on past activities, the conference brings attention to the theme of corruption in public service delivery, particularly health, water, and education. It provides participants with an inclusive and interactive platform to:

   (a) Explore the complex and diverse corruption risks and challenges in these sectors, which are often interconnected with gaps in developmental performance, including the achievement of the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs);

   (b) Formulate comprehensive approaches and specific solutions that draw on international standards and comparative experiences while taking the national and local contexts into consideration.
